The Commissioners take much pleasure in presenting to your honorable body the greatly improved condition and appearance of the Library room, and flatter themselves it will compare most favorably with any other similar institution. The enlarged space secured for books in the alcoves; their protection from coal dust and dirt, from pilfering by dishonest persons, and misplacing of volumes, as was the case in all these respects formerly, are some of the advantages in the new alcoves and cases, all being under lock and key, whilst the fine glass fronts enable visitors to see the titles of books as they are arranged on the shelves.

The walls and ceilings of both rooms have been handsomely painted in oil, with caustic or dead finish, and the hall lighted with twelve chandeliers of six burners each. No room in our noble Capitol so much needed renovating as the hall of the Library. The alcoves and cases were all of the old style, and insufficient for the increase of books; the walls very dark from smoke, and no protection to books from theft or dust, or the intrusion of suspicious characters. All this has been remedied by the new arrangement, and alcoves and cases can be increased in number on a fine gallery extending on three sides of the room. The design of this gallery is to increase the capacity of the hall for receiving books, and the building of these alcoves should not be long deferred, so that the spaces designed and necessary for each department of literature on the first floor may not be taken up with volumes which do not appertain to them. All has been done in the most workmanlike manner, according to the plans and specifications of experienced architects, and the constant attention of the committee; and although not fully completed at the date of this report, it is hoped the whole improvement will meet with your approval.

The Librarian reports a balance in his hands of $217.92 from sales of duplicate volumes, according to a resolution of the session of 1866. As this sum is derived from the sale of books which had been received by exchanges and donations, and did not cost the State anything, the committee respectfully ask the privilege, by resolution of your body, of expending it according to their own discretion for the benefit of the Library, reporting to the next session of the Legislature.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. D. COX, Governor,

WM. HENRY SMITH, Secretary of State,

S. G. HARBAUGH, Librarian,

Commissioners of the State Library.
